Actors and their Media Strategies – Analyzing Objectives, Target Groups, and Communication Strategies and Styles

Who are the actors, which organizational structures do they use, and how do they fit into conventional political landscapes (such as left-right as well as progressive-conservative splits)? To which social strata do they appeal to? How do they manage their public image and what are their main strategies? What kinds of communications strategies do populist actors in the respective countries pursue? What are their communication styles, do they employ recognizable language patterns? Which sorts of media do they use? Is populism reflected in educational policies and education media? Which roles do references to the authentic play, and how is authenticity discursively constructed?
